

Disguised Collective Action in China

Author: Diana Fu [1]

In: Comparative Political Studies, Vol 50, No 4, 2016, pp. 499-527

The author, drawing on fieldwork in unofficial labour organizations, examines how, rather than stage risky collective protests, these groups quite often assist individuals to demand their rights by appealing to officials. She concludes that 'disguised collective action' can secure concessions for participants and enable activists to find 'a middle ground between challenging authorities and organizational survival'.

Source URL (modified on 25/05/2020 - 15:04): <https://civilresistance.info/biblio-item/2016/disguised-collective-action-china>

Links

[1] <https://civilresistance.info/author/2996>