

Continuity and Change in the Contemporary Canadian Feminist Movement

Author: Brenda O'Neil [1]

In: Canadian Journal of Political Science, Vol 50, No 2, 2017, pp. 443-459

This article examines how the changing external environment faced by the Canadian feminist movement, and its internal situation, are reflected in the beliefs and strategies of recruits to the movement at a given point in time. Using a large sample data set, the author provides evidence that the changes experienced by the Canadian feminist movement from the 1980s onwards have resulted in noticeable shifts in the collective identity and activist strategies of subsequent waves of feminist recruits. The findings suggest that further research into cohort recruitment and replacement is essential for understanding the forces at play in shaping the contemporary Canadian feminist movement.

Source URL (modified on 06/05/2020 - 16:45):<https://civilresistance.info/biblio-item/2017/continuity-and-change-contemporary-canadian-feminist-movement>

Links

[1] <https://civilresistance.info/author/2691>