

Violence Against Women In Politics: Research On Political Parties In Honduras

Author: Isabel Garcia [1]

National Democratic Institute (NDI), Washington, D.C., 2017, pp. 52

This report focuses on “all forms of aggression, coercion and intimidation against women as political actors simply because they are women. These acts – whether directed at women as civic leader, voters, political party members, candidates, elected representatives or appointed officials – are designed to restrict the political participation of women as a group. This violence reinforces traditional stereotypes and roles given to women, using domination and control to exclude women from politics”, as defined by the NDI.
