

#MeToo on campus: UK universities investigate sexual assaults themselves

Author: Anna Fazackerley [1]

In: The Guardian, 2018

Reports that universities (both student unions and the authorities) are becoming more active in trying to prevent, and taking action against, forms of harassment. But a survey published in March 2018 found 70% of female students had suffered harassment or assault and only 6% had reported it to the university. Harassment is a problem both between students and between some staff members and students.

See also: Suen, Evianne, '#MeToo movement reaches an all-time high across UK universities', 23 August 2018 <https://theboar.org/2018/08/metoo-movement-sexual-uk-universities/> [2]

Available online at:

<https://www.theguardian.com/education/2018/jul/31/metoo-campus-universities-sexual-assaults-women> [3]

Source URL (modified on 04/12/2019 - 18:28): <https://civilresistance.info/biblio-item/2018/metoo-campus-uk-universities-investigate-sexual-assaults-themselves>

Links

[1] <https://civilresistance.info/author/2442>

[2] <https://theboar.org/2018/08/metoo-movement-sexual-uk-universities/>

[3] <https://www.theguardian.com/education/2018/jul/31/metoo-campus-universities-sexual-assaults-women>