

Why sexual assault survivors can't say #MeToo at some Canadian universities

Author: Emma Jones [1]

In: The Discourse, 2018

Exposes the widespread phenomenon of Canadian universities censoring students who want to denounce episodes of sexual harassment. The article includes the report by OurTurn – a national, student-led action plan that aims to implement strategies to end sexual violence on campus, and sets out the policies survivors have to follow while filing a complaint. The National Our Turn Action Plan provides guidelines for student unions and groups to: prevent sexual violence and eliminate rape culture on Canadian campuses; support survivors and create a culture of survivor-centrism at Canadian institutions; and campaign for policy and legislative reforms at the campus, provincial and national levels.

Available online at:

<https://thediscourse.ca/gender/why-sexual-assault-survivors-cant-say-metoo-at-some-canadian-universities> [2]

Source URL (modified on 16/04/2020 - 19:06):<https://civilresistance.info/biblio-item/2018/why-sexual-assault-survivors-cant-say-metoo-some-canadian-universities>

Links

[1] <https://civilresistance.info/author/2653> [2] <https://thediscourse.ca/gender/why-sexual-assault-survivors-cant-say-metoo-at-some-canadian-universities>