

Women and the crisis in Venezuela: a conversation with Gioconda Mota

Author: Cira Pasqual [1]

In: Venezueanalysis, 2018

Venezuela veteran activist for women's rights, Gioconda Mota, discusses the growth of feminist movements in Venezuela. She pays particular attention to how they have contributed to the improvement of existing legal frameworks on the issue of gender violence and women's role in the economy, and how much work is still needed with regard to dissident sexualities and abortion. She also discusses the predominantly sexist nature of justice administration, and the lack of women's participation in strategic spheres of power, despite the increased participation in communal councils, social organisations and committees. She also sheds light on the feminisation of poverty, due to the double burden of productivity and care on women. The interview with Mota came after a group of feminist researchers released a ground-breaking report on the situation of women's human rights in Venezuela, called 'Desde Nosotras' (From Us), whose 250 pages reveal the key challenges facing the political, economic, health, sexual and reproductive rights of Venezuelan women today.

Available online at:

<https://venezuelanalysis.com/analysis/14169> [2]

Source URL (modified on 19/05/2020 -

14:57):<https://civilresistance.info/biblio-item/2018/women-and-crisis-venezuela-conversation-gioconda-mota>

Links

[1] <https://civilresistance.info/author/2944> [2] <https://venezuelanalysis.com/analysis/14169>