

#MeToo: In Canada, rape myths continue to prevent justice for sexual assault survivors

Author(s): Kate Puddister [1], Danielle MacNabb [2]

In: The Conversation, 2019

Criticises the law that entered into force at the end of 2018 – Bill C-51 – that is intended to counter-act under-reporting and “ensure that victims of sexual assault and gender-based violence are treated with the utmost compassion and respect.” However, the authors argue, there is nothing in the law to protect against judicial misapplication or inappropriate methods of defence in court.

Available online at:

<https://theconversation.com/metoo-in-canada-rape-myths-continue-to-prevent-justice-for-sexual-assault-survivors-110568> [3]

Source URL (modified on 16/04/2020 - 18:46):<https://civilresistance.info/biblio-item/2019/metoo-canada-rape-myths-continue-prevent-justice-sexual-assault-survivors>

Links

[1] <https://civilresistance.info/author/2650> [2] <https://civilresistance.info/author/2651> [3] <https://theconversation.com/metoo-in-canada-rape-myths-continue-to-prevent-justice-for-sexual-assault-survivors-110568>