

New Zealand and Disarmament: Where National and Global Interests Converge

Author(s): Lyndon Burford [1], Kate Dewes [2]

In: in Brady AM (ed) Small States and the Changing Global Order. The World of Small States, Volume 6, pp. 325-342

New Zealand has built a strong, bipartisan record over several decades for constructive disarmament and arms control policies, which promotes its reputation as a relatively independent, principled international actor. New Zealand's role as a champion of a rules-based international order, and as a defender of the rights and interests of small states, is also underpinned by its record.

Source URL (modified on 11/06/2020 - 13:53):<https://civilresistance.info/biblio-item/2019/new-zealand-and-disarmament-where-national-and-global-interests-converge>

Links

[1] <https://civilresistance.info/author/3064> [2] <https://civilresistance.info/author/3065>