

Resisting Militarism: Direct Action and the Politics of Subversion

Author: Chris Rossdale [1]

Edinburgh University Press, Edinburgh, 2019, pp. 288

Rossdale has studied a range of British campaigning groups taking radical forms of direct action to resist militarism and the arms trade, including the Campaign against Arms Trade and the broad coalition involved in Stop the Arms Fair. He describes some of their protests over the previous 15 years, such as peace camps, auctioning off a tank outside an arms fair and protesters supergluing themselves to the London offices of Lockheed Martin, and argues for the 'radical and ethical potential of prefigurative direct action'. He also develops a depiction of militarism from the standpoint of those resisting it, and examines the disagreements and debates between protesters, including the interpretation of nonviolence. Chapters cover feminist and queer anti-militarism, and the lack of racial diversity among the protesters.

Source URL (modified on 06/07/2020 - 15:10):<https://civilresistance.info/biblio-item/2019/resisting-militarism-direct-action-and-politics-subversion>

Links

[1] <https://civilresistance.info/author/3142>