Japanese journalist Shiori Ito was awarded damages after publicly accusing Noriyuki Yamaguchi, a famous TV presenter, of rape in 2017. Her case became a symbol of Japan's MeToo movement and of the country's failure to investigate allegations of rape and sexual assaults. After Shiori Ito went public, the documentary 'Japan's Secret Shame' was released by the BBC, covering violence towards women, and structural inequality and discrimination against women in Japan, as well as on her individual case.
