

Committed Participation or Flashes of Action? Mobilizing Public Attention to Climate on Twitter, 2011-2015

Author(s): Kierstin Thorson [1], Lupamg Weng [2]

In: Environmental Communication, Vol 14, No 2, 2020, pp. 347-363

Climate advocacy organizations are increasingly using social media to mobilize the public and so put pressure on policy-makers. The authors' investigation found that relatively few people repeatedly used Twitter on climate issues, though a small group of organizations and individuals did so repeatedly. They therefore raise questions about maintaining political interest over time.

Source URL (modified on 17/07/2020 - 19:30): <https://civilresistance.info/biblio-item/2020/committed-participation-or-flashes-action-mobilizing-public-attention-climate>

Links

[1] <https://civilresistance.info/author/3171>

[2] <https://civilresistance.info/author/3172>