Pegoro, Leonardo, Second rate victims: the forced sterilization of Indigenous peoples in the USA and Canada [7], Settler Colonial Studies, Vol. 5, issue 2, 2015, pp. 161-173

The author examines the decades of enforced sterilization of Indigenous women in North America in the 20th century and the influence of eugenics ideologies on this policy. Use of sterilization was most common from the 1940s to the 1970s, when the Indigenous populations began (after centuries of decline) to increase in numbers. This trend alarmed both eugenicists anxious to maintain racial 'purity', and corporations seeking to exploit resources on indigenous lands.
