

Brian Martin:

Is a nonviolence researcher.

Born in the United States, I emigrated to Australia in 1969 to avoid conscription and do a PhD in theoretical physics at the University of Sydney. Only in the late 1970s, while working in Canberra, did I become involved in environmental and peace activism. Since 1986 I have worked as a social scientist at the University of Wollongong. In the group Schweik Action Wollongong, I participate in community research projects related to nonviolence. I've written books and articles on nonviolence and on other topics including whistleblowing, information issues, scientific controversies and democracy.

For relevant publications, see:

<http://www.uow.edu.au/arts/sts/bmartin/pubs/peace.html>

Email: bmartin@uow.edu.au